

FormView Control in Asp.Net

- The FormView control is used to display a single record at a time from a data source.
- When you use the FormView control, you create templates to display and edit data-bound values.
- The difference between the FormView and the DetailsView controls is that the DetailsView control uses a tabular layout where each field of the record is displayed as a row of its own. In contrast, the FormView control does not specify a pre-defined layout for displaying the record. Instead, you create a template that contains controls to display individual fields from the record.
- The FormView control provides the user interface (UI) for navigating between records.
